Call for Special Issue of MNJR on the theme of “regional security and development challenges in South Asia”

Invitation is now open to interested individuals to submit papers to the special issue of Maldives National Journal of Research (MNJR) focused on exploring the theme of the regional security and development challenges in South Asia. The issue seeks to explore a wide range of topics related to regional security challenges through the lens of a number of critical areas including, but not limited to, terrorism, violent extremism and their impact on development.

The MNU and the United Nations in Maldives will jointly release the special issue. This call is open to academics and practitioners alike. Creating opportunities for practitioners and academics to disseminate ideas in a constructive setting is one of the goals of the MNJR.

MNJR is a double-blind peer reviewed journal. MNJR aims to promote research and scholarly enquiry in all disciplines relevant to the Maldives. The journal welcomes high quality original research articles, literature reviews, book reviews, comments, opinion and perspectives. All submissions must follow the general author guideline found at: <http://www.mnu.edu.mv/index.php/research/416>.

Manuscripts written in English or Dhivehi will be considered for publication in MNJR. However, all submissions must have an abstract written in English. All contributions are to be addressed to the editor and sent through electronic mode at the following email id: mnjr@mnu.edu.mv by 3.00pm, 31 August 2016. The full name, phone number, and work address of the corresponding author must be included in the paper.
